UN Secretary-General's High-Level Panel on Global Sustainability Report, 30 January 2012,

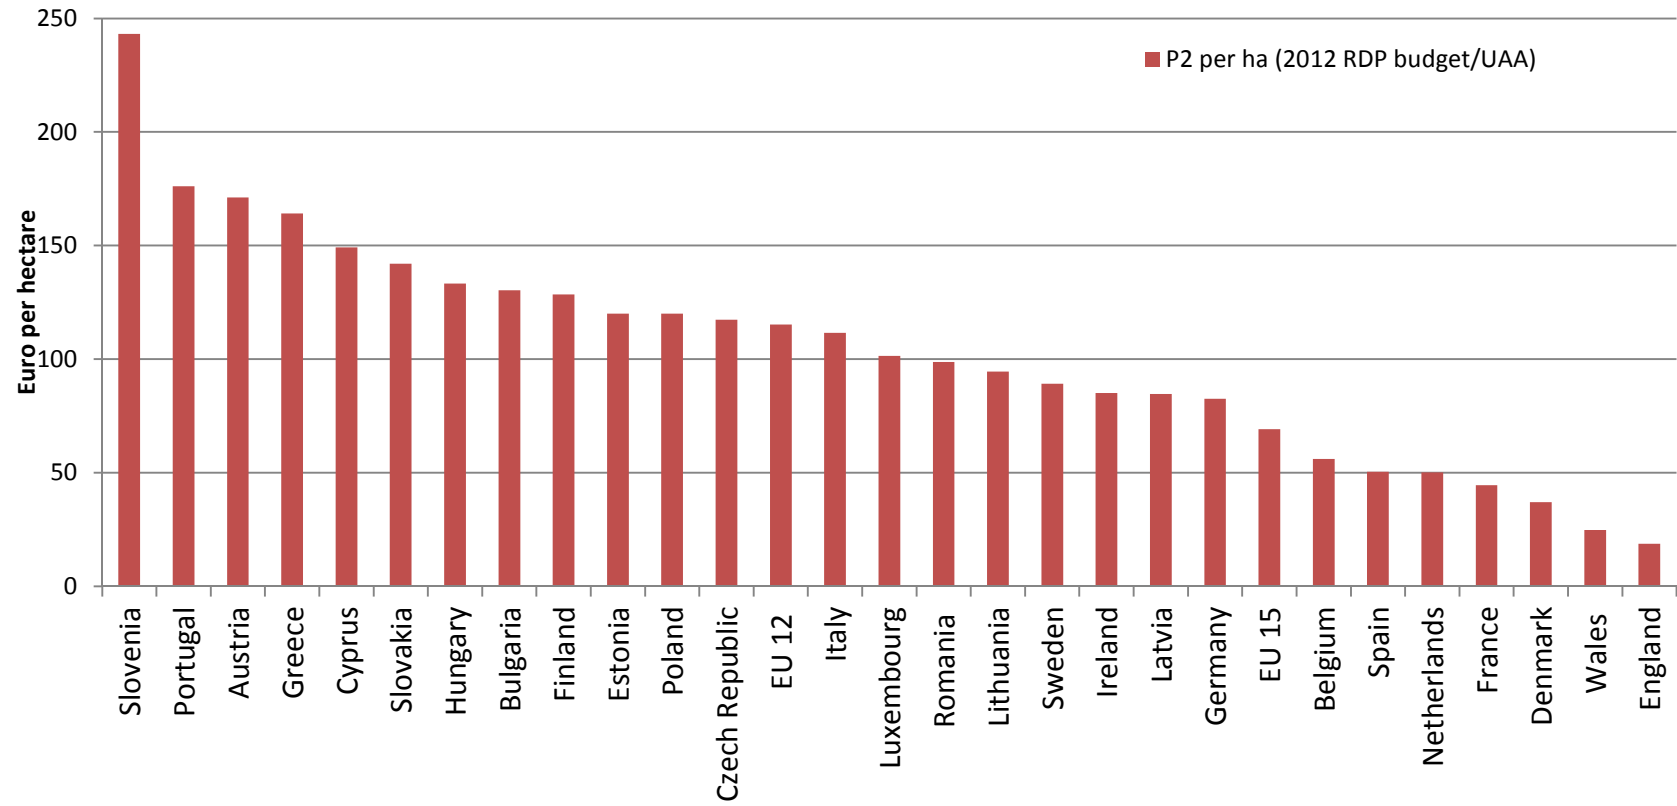

“Governments and international organizations should work to create a new green revolution — an “ever-green revolution” — for the twenty-first century that aims to at least double productivity while drastically reducing resource use and avoiding further loss of biodiversity, [and]topsoil loss and water depletion and contamination...”

And it says we have to do this through scaling up investment in agricultural research and development, to ensure that cutting-edge research is rapidly moved from laboratory to field.
